

Brett Johnson Sculpture Instructor

Brett Johnson grew up and graduated from Walker, Minnesota where he first discovered his talent and passion for visual arts and more specifically, three-dimensional art. Brett currently attends Minnesota State University of Moorhead and is pursuing a career in art education with an emphasis in ceramics, specifically sculptural and hand built ceramics with a minor in special education. He is actively involved in multiple organizations, including the United States Judo Federation, the National Education Association and is the vice president of the MSUM National Art Education Association.

Brett found his niche in sculpture and loves sharing his craft with others. As a K-12 art educator Brett enjoys teaching his students complex forms of problem solving, thinking through and within a material that problems can have more than one solution and multiple perspectives, and that the limits of our language do not define the limits of our cognition.

Brett has instructed sculpture, ceramics, and mixed media at Independent Lake Camp in Pennsylvania, volunteered teaching art at the public library, mentored at risk students in “Arts Adventure”, and has taught elementary, middle school, and high school in the Fargo/Moorhead area for the past four years.
